Tourists To North West Back Amidst Dust Storm

After spending a week touring various places within the orbit of the North West, a large group of Yenching spring vacationists returned to the campus greeted by a terrible dust-storm on last Labor Day. Dark, dusty, exhausted, they at once plunged into the bath-tubs or rushed under the showers, having been "dry" for the whole week.

Led by Messrs. Ma Wen-chao and Yen Wen-shu, a senior, the party left Yenching late at night, April 24, crossed the Great Wall the next day, after passing through long tunnels and along high precipices.

Kalgan was the first city visited by the tourists. A smaller city than Peiping, Kalgan had been a prosperous city until the trade route to Outer Mongolia was blocked. Opium is sold openly in many shops on busy thoroughfares.

The party next proceeded to Tatung where they viewed the great stone Buddha of Yunk'ang, believed to be built during the Six Dynasties. When one party member stood before it posing for a picture, he resembled a tom-tom in a man's palm.

At Suiyuan the party was greeted and invited to dinner by Mr. James Lin, a Yenching alumnus. Thence they darted forward to the ultimate destination, Poutou, a typical Mongolian city. Caravans of camels could be seen walking to and fro in the streets all day long. Opium, like foods, was sold at a low price. "Over half the population of this city are opium smokers," the party was told by a restaurant-waiter.

A graduate of the Peiping Chung Kuo College in 1934, Ch'en entered Yenching during the fall of that year and has remained here until not long after the opening of the present semester when he left because of illness. An examination at the PUMC revealed a tubercular chest.

N.Y. Trustees Reaffirm Stuart's Understanding

Message Removes Apprehensions Held
For Future Of Institution ; Cooperation Pledged

A cable from the Board of Trustees of Yenching University in New York was received by the President's Office, in which the Trustees, during their annual meeting pledged full cooperation and support to future undertakings that will be adopted by the authorities here. The Trustees reaffirmed the understanding which Dr. Stuart had reached with them when he was in New York this Spring that Yenching will remain where it is and carry on "come what may". They have full confidence in the President, the Faculty, and student body. And the cable also carried affectionate and hearty greetings from the University's elders in the States.

Apprehensions concerning the future of Yenching University have repeatedly been expressed in many circles, especially among the numerous friends of the institution in China and abroad, during the period since the establishment of the Heipei-Chahar Political Council. The recent cable message brings a ray of hope to those who have speculated with solicitude on the future of schools in North China.

The Trustees of the University have always been not only a bulwark behind the work here, but have acted sympathetically in the guiding of its policies. The assurance of active cooperation and support at their last meeting is but another indication of their progressive spirit and of their realization of the peculiar problems the University is now facing.

Women's Dormitories House Simplicity, Beauty; Tumult Reigns In Non-class Hours

The four Women's dormitories of Yenching University are located in the form of a quadrangle. When a stranger comes into the campus, he or she will see that they are alike in architecture, when he or she enters into each of them, he or she will discover that they are also in the same form.

The number and position of rooms, sitting room, dining room, bathroom, are all alike, even tables, chairs, and all other furniture are of the same type. In every room occupied by the students, there are two beds, one table, two chairs, and one closet. However, the likeness does not present a scene of monotony, but rather of regularity, simplicity, and cleanliness. Further more, the arrangement of the furnitures in each room is different. Since there are various kinds of adornment in different rooms, a beauty of variety exists. Different pictures hang upon the wall. If a student has the hobby of collecting photography all her excellent productions are shown to her guests. If the student is fond of moving pictures, portraits of some prominent movie stars will be seen on the wall, instead of photographs of landscapes, animals and other objects. Some have calligraphies or paintings of famous artists to adorn their rooms. Other ornaments, as vases of Chinese porcelain, or carved woodwork are found in different rooms. Though these ornaments are different, the motive is the same, that is the natural want of beauty. There are some students, who either due to their laziness, or lack of time, do not trouble themselves with adorning their rooms, letting them look at sixes and sevens. And if they get up late, they do not fold their bedding until night. They can sleep without using their coverlet. They are "economists."

All dormitories are quiet during the class hours. After four o'clock in the afternoon one can hear loud sounds of violin, phonograph, Chinese opera singing and foreign song. After supper, the noise gradually abates and the dormitories become tranquil. When the bell rings for rest before the electric warning, at 10:45 p.m. noise arises again in the bathroom, where students hurry bathing. If they talk they talk in loud voice, because the sound of water interrupts their conversation. Thus, the tumult is increased.

Ying Hsi-ying Marries Dr. Horace Yu In Nanking

The marriage of Miss Elizabeth Ying Hsi-ying, former student at Yenching, to Dr. Horace I. Yu of Nanking, took place recently in the Capital.

Miss Ying, after two years in Yenching, entered P.U.M.C. in 1933 to study nursing. She was reported engaged to Dr. Yu last summer, and the marriage was announced for this summer when Miss Ying will have been graduated from the P.U.M.C.

However, the recent appointment of her father to the Washington Embassy as Chinese consular, necessitating his departure this month, made expedient pushing forward the marriage date a few months early. Miss Ying left for Nanking early last month, but returned to her studies in Peiping a few days after the nuptial ceremonies.

Dr. Yu is head of the orthopaedic department of the Central Hospital in Nanking. He received his M.D. degree at the Northwestern University, Illinois, U.S.A.

If it is a holiday, many of the residents go to town to see their relatives, friends, or buy goods. In this case the dormitories have another aspect of life. Most of those who do not go to town will sleep longer than usual. Sometimes tranquility reigns, because few are in the dormitories. When night comes and the holiday ends, the buses bring back these pleasure seekers from town. Then a little noise will be heard. But some of them will prepare for a quiz for next morning so they study very hard before the light is switched off.
